Dr. Nicole D. Vick, Ed.D., M.P.H., CHES, is a public health professional, educator, civic leader, podcaster, and author who has spent over twenty years providing tools and strategies to stakeholders, community-based organizations, students, and residents to improve health and prevent disease in some of Southern California's most underserved communities. Dr. Vick has 15 years of teaching experience and enjoys bringing students the "Black Girl Magic" version of public health to students while providing them with a social justice lens to view the world. Her last teaching assignment was at Occidental College, and she has taught at California State University–Los Angeles, Ashford University, and University of Phoenix.
